

ABSTRACT

A floating breakwater assembly comprising an array of elongate rods articulated to one another for extending at a substantial vertical position at least partially submersed in water, wherein the rods are made of a flexible material and 5 where the array is elastically deformable into an arcuate shape by bending the array.